As one of Ireland's oldest food companies, Flahavan's can trace its first family connection to the mill in Co. Waterford back to 1785 when John Flahavans' great, great, great-grandfather was managing the business. Seven generations on, Flahavan's celebrates over 230 years of milling oats in Kilmacthomas, Co. Waterford and today sells a range of over 40 oat products worldwide.

Flahavan's has pioneered a dramatic change in the way consumers think about oat-based foods and its compelling health benefits. This is achieved by continually staying close to the consumer and identifying, understanding and responding to their emerging health and lifestyle needs, through new innovative products and formats.

Operating in a rural community nestled underneath the Comeragh Mountains, sustainable production is at the heart of Flahavan's 230-year-old mill process. Over 60% of its mill energy comes from its own renewable sources, such as burning the outer shell of the oat to generate the steam used in the cooking process, as well as using the original millstream at the River Mahon which runs on wind power.

The highest quality, locally grown regular oats are sourced and selected from farmers within a 60 mile radius, which also reduces the carbon footprint involved in transport.

Why Us

Flahavan's has been milling the finest Irish oats, with a distinctively natural creamy taste in Kilmacthomas, Co. Waterford for over seven generations. This makes it Ireland's favourite oat brand, with over two million servings of Flahavan's porridge consumed each week.

Flahavan's champions a sustainable, family-run milling tradition. Smaller scale, sustainable production is at the heart of its 230-year-old mill process.

Sostenibilità

- Sustainability has always been a major part of the Flahavan's story.
- Since the 1780s, when the original waterwheel drove the mill, there has been a company-wide commitment to working in harmony with nature and minimising the company's impact on its environment and community.
- E Flahavan's and Sons supports its local community whenever possible – the company has been a main sponsor of the West Waterford Festival of Food for many years; it regularly donates product to the Waterford Food Bank and other local charities.
- The company provides product to support the Waterford Senior GAA teams, as well as the Dublin City Marathon among other sporting events across the country.
